It is being established in the special economic zone of Duqm. It is a project that would synergise the area of Duqm and make it a viable and strategic energy hub in the region. Located in the Special Economic Zone in Duqm (Sezad) near Oman's south-east coast, the refinery will process multiple types of blended crude oil and will be configured to operate as a hydrocracking unit. It will also be the first refinery in the Middle East to process crude oil from another GCC country on a long-term contractual basis, project officials said in a statement. During construction, Duqm Refinery will account for a staggering 8% of Oman's gross domestic product, according to a senior Duqm Refinery representative. This figure is expected to drop when the refinery begins operations.
